Road

The taxi and ride-hailing regulation that governs the mode most transit trips end with, and the national freeway network the intercity coach system this site already covers actually runs on.

Regulation

How Taiwan licenses taxis and ride-hailing platforms, and the specific legal mechanism that ended Uber's 2017 shutdown fight.

Taxi and ride-hailing regulation

How the licensing regime distinguishes a traditional 小黃 from a 多元化計程車, the statute Uber was fined under, and the 2020 Grand Chamber ruling that actually ended its shutdown fight — on a jurisdictional technicality, not a ruling that Uber had been legal all along.

Network

The national freeway system as infrastructure — the numbered routes and the electronic-toll-collection system that replaced every staffed tollbooth in 2013.

National freeways and electronic tolling

The 國道 network's numbered routes across three self-described construction generations, and the 2013 switch to all-electronic distance-based tolling that laid off 947 staff in one day.

Two subjects that sit underneath the rest of this site's coverage rather than alongside it. Regulation [\[/road/regulation/\]](#) covers how Taiwan licenses and regulates taxis and ride-hailing platforms — the last-mile mode a large share of transit trips actually end with, and the subject of a real regulatory fight when Uber entered the market. Network [\[/road/network/\]](#) covers the national freeway network (國道) as infrastructure: the numbered routes, their lengths, and the electronic-toll-collection system that replaced Taiwan's last staffed tollbooth in 2013 — the roads this site's intercity coach coverage runs on, without which that coverage has no infrastructure context.
