

Network growth timeline

1996 to now: 19 dated opening events covering 108 station records, with 102 records still marked TBC.

How to read this

This is a station-opening chronology, not a reconstruction of every project announcement. A dated event appears only when the station registry carries an explicit opening date in its primary-source research record. Stations whose operator or government record has been checked for identity but does not carry a date remain in the TBC table; they are not assigned a line-opening date by inference. That distinction matters for extensions opened in phases and for stations whose civil completion preceded passenger service.

The first dated record in the current corpus is in 1997, so the requested 1996 start is retained as the timeline boundary rather than filled with an invented event. Each dated row links to the station pages and names the opening source read by the research record. A source can support several stations on one line; it is listed once per event, while the station links keep the sequence visible.

Opening date TBC

These 102 station records have no explicit opening date in the checked station research. They stay listed so the gap is auditable: the line and station identity are useful, but a plausible date would not be. The station page for each row carries its own source family and the same TBC boundary.
